Heading East Ex-Head Coach Morse accepts Pennsylvania job

Andrew Addis
Editor in chief

Former Head Basketball Coach Bill Morse boarded a plane at 5 a.m. today bound for Pennsylvania, where he will publicly announce acceptance of his new job.

The position at Mercyhurst College in Erie, Pa., leads Morse into a career of full-time coaching of an NCAA Division II basketball program.

Tom Spicer, athletic director, said he had not been contacted by Morse yet, but read in the "Hays Daily News" that Morse might have accepted a new job.

When the University Leader contacted Spicer about the confirmation from Morse, he said, "If that's what Bill wants to do, then that's great."

Morse began seeking new employment following his resignation March 18. During his nine-year career with Fort Hays State, he accumulated two national titles for the men's basketball team and left the Tigers with a 235-65 record highlighting his time as coach.

"I've really enjoyed my nine years here," he said. "It's been the happiest nine years of my life."

Still, the resignation followed his two worst seasons with the Tigers accumulating records of 18-12.

The move back east puts Morse in what he labeled an exciting area for basketball.

"It's a strong Division II program with a real commitment to basketball," he said.

Morse indicated that Mercyhurst has a tradition of strong basketball teams, but other sports at that school play Division III.

"It's a real basketball hotbed," he said. "It's the kind of assignment I like."

Another reason Morse said he is looking forward to the move is that he will be headed back to familiar territory. Morse came to Hays in 1982 from Hillsdale, Mich., where his teams earned records of 116-41.

But, before he takes over for Mercyhurst, Morse plans to finish his contract with FHSU, which expires in August. He will be traveling some, weekends for recruitment purposes.

Specifics on the contract with Mercyhurst were released by Morse. His contract is for three years, he is not required to teach any classes, he is allowed a full-time assistant and he is allowed 12 full scholarships.

"I intend to be a winning team, though they've been down recently," he said. "I want to make a consistent power."

Officials of Mercyhurst have mentioned to Morse he should consider scheduling his career with their college for 10 years, but that is as long as he plans on coaching, he said.

"If I give it 10 years, I think I'd be near the end, at that point," Morse said.

Election results in doubt

Bannister offered office; Irwin considers appeal

Sarah Simpson
Staff writer

A four-vote lead was not enough to elect Andrew Irwin and John Wagnon to president and vice president of the student body.

Grant Bannister, Hays sophomore, and Lane Victorson, Yuma, Colo., junior, will be Fort Hays State's student body president and vice president for the 1991-'92 school year.

Irwin, Junction City junior, and Wagnon, Topeka sophomore, plan to appeal the decision that disqualified them from the Student Government Association race, Irwin said.

The Irwin and Wagnon ticket received a total of 272 votes, while Bannister and Victorson received 268.

The remainder of the student votes went to the tickets of Norman Fisher, Hays senior, and Robert Ives, Hays sophomore, with 73; Tate Kerst, Wray, Colo., sophomore, and Mindy Ebberts, Hutchinson sophomore, with 66; and Hayden Brown, Sabetha sophomore, and Denise Gregg, Hays sophomore, with 52.

However, these three tickets were also disqualified under the same guideline violations, Sandstrom said.

The ineligibility came as a result of violating campaign requirements.

The SGA bylaws require all presidential/vice presidential tickets to file statements of their campaign expenses on the Wednesday preceding elections.

Each candidate must also sign a form stating they understand these requirements and will relinquish their office if they do not comply fully with these requirements, Sandstrom said.

On April 3, the Wednesday preceding elections, only the Bannister and Victorson ticket had turned in a list, he said.

All tickets that did not do so were disqualified, he said.

This decision came after the Senate Affairs Committee met Tuesday to discuss the violations, Scott Jecha, student body vice president, said.

However, Irwin said he had interpreted the requirements differently than the Senate Affairs Committee.

"When (Sandstrom) informed me that we had missed the date, I made it clear that I had understood Wednesday morning, April 10, as preceding elections," Irwin said.

Sandstrom told Irwin to have his list in by 8 a.m. the next day, Irwin said.

"I had it on my desk by 7:55 a.m.," he said.

Jecha said the committee could see no other interpretation besides their own.

Campus disabled to share challenge

Andrew Addis
Editor in chief

Students should not be alarmed to see student body president Erik Sandstrom in a wheelchair next Monday.

Not only Sandstrom, but other students, administrators and community members will be taking part in one of the first events of this year's Disability Awareness Week through Friday.

"I think that basically our goal is just awareness. We need to let the campus know that we're here and we're here to stay. Everyone has a right to an education and some people have different needs and we just need our needs to be recognized," Dianne Dunovan, Hays junior, said.

The week is in conjunction with a community-wide disability awareness program.

Throughout the week, members of the Disabled Students Association will be generating that kind of awareness with activities like next Monday's DSA Scavenger Hunt.

Carol Solko, DSA faculty adviser, described the scavenger hunt with the same consistent theme of awareness.

"Basically, it's just to give them (participants) an awareness of the obstacles that people who are in chairs, or who are visually impaired, would encounter at the university," Solko said.

The event is organized for three separate hunts with 10 different participants. Five of those will be in wheelchairs, and five will be blindfolded.

At the start of their particular hunt at either 11:30 a.m., 12:30 p.m. or 1:30 p.m. Monday, participants will be given a packet of items to collect, a map and a personal spotter. Solko estimates each hunt will last an hour.

Not all volunteer participants have made final arrangements to take part, but Solko did provide a partial list of hopefuls: James Dawson, vice president for student affairs; Dorothy Knoll, assistant vice president for student affairs; James Murphy, professor of administration; Scott Jecha, student body vice president; Angela Johnson, Hays senior; and Sandstrom.

Others include Steve Culver, director of residential life; Steve Wood, director of the Memorial Union; I.B. Dent, director of student activities; Anita Cochran, KBSH TV; and possibly Delbert Gross, D-Hays; and Jerry Moran, R-Hays.

The course for the then physically and visually impaired starts with a trip to Stroup Hall, where participants will either be asked to pick something up or get their bloodpressure checked. This first stage is difficult, Solko said.

"If you're in a chair, especially a manual chair, it takes a lot to get from the bottom of that slope to the top of the building," she said. "Once you get there, the doors are not automatic and you have to maneuver yourself in the door."

"I think we take a lot for granted being able to do that."

Secondly, participants will run an errand in Malloy Hall before going to Forsyth Library to make a copy, and then head out to Sheridan Hall. Finally, they will head back to the Memorial Union where their last obstacle calls for them to buy a pop.

"I think those of us who can get around, and who are aviators, don't have an understanding of how hard it is to go from, say, the Memorial Union to the Nursing Building," Solko said. "We can step off the curb. We can cut across. We don't have to go to a curb cut."

This event is avoiding Picken Hall since most offices moved to Sheridan, but if it had been included Solko said it would have been difficult for the participants. Since the building is not handicap accessible, the participant would have been forced to ask a stranger to run that errand for them.

Still, the activity is simply a prelude to a week of awareness activities that will not only cause non-handicapped students to see the difficulties experienced by disabled students, it will also allow DSA members to acknowledge those who have helped them, Dunovan said.

Student performance scheduled at Bijou

Madeline Holler
Copy editor

The work of one student has taken theater off the stage and put it on the dinner table.

Or at least close to it.

Sean Gunther, Greensburg senior, and the cast under his direction will give the final performance of the one-hour play "Sparks in the Park," 8 p.m. Saturday at the Bijou Supper Club, 507 W. Seventh St.

"We did a six-person performance last year, and I really enjoyed that and thought we could do something like that again, only a little bigger"

Sean Gunther, Greensburg senior

"Sparks in the Park" is a coming-of-age comedy of sorts, Gunther said. "It's about a guy between his high school and college years who writes plays," he said. "Sometimes he gets his real life confused with the lives of his play characters."

Under the direction of Gunther, a directing student in the department of communication, the play is completely student performed and operated.

Whereas students can tryout and perform in several productions throughout the year for the Fort Hays State area of theatre, Gunther said becoming the director can be inspired him to take on a play under his direction.

"We did a six-person performance last year, and I really enjoyed that and thought we could do something like that again, only a little bigger," he said.

Gunther and his cast began work on the performance one week before Spring Break and gave its first performance last week in the McMindes Hall East Lounge.

"Every night we had a lot of people," Gunther said. "It was always between 27 and 55."

Residence Hall Association donated $250 toward the purchase of desserts for the audience during the intermission.

The set, although not as elaborate as he hoped, is more than a marked off area with imagined props, Gunther said.

"I imagined that it would be a very elaborate set, the others told me it would not be elaborate at all," he said. "But it managed to wind up somewhere in between."

The set includes three raised platforms at different levels and an open area for the park scenes and the benches, he said.

Gunther said he went to RHA with the idea, and because of their donation for the desserts, attempted to include as many students from the residence halls as he could.

Because of the interest shown in the play by the auditions, Gunther said he worked with two casts for the women's roles.

"The women who tried out had a lot of talent, so I double cast them and different casts performed different nights last week," he said.

Although the play was time consuming and hard work, Gunther said the financing behind it was not a burden.

"I've probably spent, out of my pocket, $15 this whole time," he said.

Other expenses were covered through donations for the sets and costumes from the department of communication; lights and sound equipment from the Memorial Union Activities Board; the performance areas from McMindes Hall and the Bijou.

Confusion reigns

Appeal needs careful consideration

There were no celebrations or groups consoling defeated candidates last night following student government elections. The attitude was somber, as an air of confusion kept all presidential and vice-presidential candidates in check.

Though the Andrew Irwin/Jack Wagnon ticket received four votes more than the closest running Grant Bannister/Lane Victorson ticket, a breach of the by-laws has given the presidency to the latter. Irwin and Wagnon are appealing.

The smooth transition of power hoped for by every administration is now an impossibility, and as the student body awaits the decision of Irwin/Wagnon's appeal and the final word on next year's leadership, there is concern about maintaining a stable student government.

At this point, students must be willing to trust their elected representatives, who will make a difficult decision concerning the semantics of the candidate's instructions.

The process to transpire in the next few days is not one of meaningless student politics, but a period of organization for the future. Students and student leaders should not charge in headlong with an inflexible opinion.

It's time for Fort Hays State to set an example of the civilized justice possible within administration.

Leadership needed

President must put plans into action

Though there is confusion surrounding who the next president will be in light of the election appeal, there should be no question what is expected of the incoming administration.

The abstract ideas chased during the campaign period need to be set aside and concrete plans put into action. Of the latter category, there are many to choose from.

The next administration should be able to achieve adequate standards of administering and using faculty evaluations. Working with Faculty Senate and quizzing constituents are the only solutions.

Each ticket pledged to make sure money from tuition increases goes to enhancing the students' education. Specifics are now in demand.

The next president must now use the leadership potential he has readily proclaimed.

Placement office lacks diversity

With finals week and graduation steadily approaching, it is necessary to discuss the opportunities that await those of us who will soon be taking our final stride, leaving the confines of university life behind us.

As the destination draws nearer, some of us have found that our attempts at job placement have not been rewarded with overwhelming offers as we had previously expected.

On the contrary, many of us will be leaving the university in May with no more hope than we had four years ago when we entered this institution.

Upon acceptance to Fort Hays State some years ago, we were told of the placement services that the institution provides its students. Our fees go to pay for this service.

Why then are we not getting the opportunities that we dreamt would be afforded us with the completion of our degree requirements?

The answer is simple. The placement office that our recruiters bragged so heavily about is not at all what we thought it would be.

By this, I mean that the placement office does a wonderful job for students majoring in something as marketable as business administration, accounting, marketing, nursing or the like.

Staff writer

However, if interests are perhaps a little more complicated or placement in the field is a little more difficult, the placement office will not be of much consequence.

I should have recognized this slight flaw in the system last semester when I attended a career fair sponsored by the placement office.

As a communications major, I felt completely out of place among all the organizations searching for business oriented candidates. Foolheartedly, I approached them only to reassure my insecurity that I did not fit the bill of prospect.

However, I did not let that incident intimidate me. I went ahead and completed a confidential file that took more time and energy than I had ever anticipated.

To my dismay, when I inquired about placement in the field of communication, I was graciously told that I could keep up on opportunities in the liberal arts category, but that not much was offered.

I walked away from that office more frustrated than I have been in a long time. I have contributed just as much as any other Fort Hays State student in the way of fees to pay for this necessary service.

The unavailability of jobs wasn't true, and I knew it because some of my instructors take time out of class schedules to announce opportunities that are sent to the department.

Is it so difficult for those opportunities to be rerouted to the placement office so that they can receive further pursuit by students?

I thought our fees were going for a practical search such as this. It is beyond comprehension that the departments do not work hand-in-hand rerouting opportunities to the placement office so that the students fully benefit from the money invested.

Furthermore, students from all departments should benefit from the service, not just a few choice areas that are already marketable.

Since I turned in my file I have been scheduled for two on-campus interviews, both of which are for management positions.

I can see where communications can branch off into management, but I really don't see how it stacks up against candidates with a major study in management.

It's sad that we are not offered opportunities that are desirable to us because we don't fit a particular category of marketable candidates.

In a world of such diversified interests, the placement office really must be able to expand in order to incorporate the needs of all the students.

We have invested so much time and money in this venture that we call education, we mustn't be forced to compromise our interests for the sake of simplicity.

Shorter session saves budget

Because of ever-increasing budget deficits, Congress has finally been forced to make some difficult decisions.

Taxes have been raised, services (such as the funding of higher education) have been slashed and the congressional operating budget has been increased.

All of these actions are necessary to allow the federal government to again be on sound fiscal footing.

Wrong.

While reducing spending and increasing taxes are necessary to insure that the nation eventually reaches sound financial footing, increasing the congressional operating budget is not a positive step toward fiscal stability.

But that is what Congress has done. While no one was looking, in November 1989, Congress managed to slip in a pay raise that upped House salaries from a measly $89,500 in 1989 to about $125,000 in 1991 (Newsweek Nov. 27, 1989). The Senate, the executive branch, and the judiciary managed to share in the bounty.

They did this under the guise of ethics reform, with the Senate cutting its maximum honoraria allowance by the same dollar amount as their raise. (This does not affect campaign contributions, which were the cause of such scandals as the Keating Five and the S&L debacle as a whole.)

To add insult to injury, on March 1, the Senate voted to increase funding for its various committees by $7.2 million. This 6-percent increase and a carryover of $4.3 million from 1990 will bring the total cost of committee spending to $118.2 million (The Dallas Morning Star March 3, 1991).

These actions and others like them may seem like nothing when compared to billion dollar deficits, but to modify an old saying, a million here, a million there and pretty soon it all adds up to real money.

I have a simple proposal to cut congressional spending: cut the length of the congressional session in half. According to "The World Almanac and Book of Facts 1991," senators had annual salaries of $98,400 and were scheduled to receive a cost-of-living increase Jan. 1.

Since I could not find any information about the increase, I will give them the benefit of the doubt and figure their income for this year to be the same as it was before. Even with the benefit of the doubt, the Senate payroll would be $9,840,000.

With 435 representatives the total House payroll comes to $54,375,000. Therefore by only having to fund Senate committees for half the time of a current session and by only paying Congressman half of their salaries, we could save $91,207,500.

This does not include the money that could be saved by only having to fund House committees for half a session, by only having to pay the salaries of bloated congressional staffs for half a session by only having to heat, cool and clean the Capitol building for half a session, with a small maintenance and security staff.

Now, I know the major argument against my proposal will be that to operate the government apparatus of a superpower you must have the legislative branch in session for the current length of time.

But you don't. Congress only passes legislation, the executive branch enforces and implements it. But if Congress feels it won't be able to get all the bills necessary to pass national groundhog-day type legislation, all they must do is get to work.

As scandals continue to increase in scope and frequency, it is becoming quite clear that many members of Congress are looking out for their own personal interests.

If they would cut out the extra-curricular activities, they could still do the same amount of work in only half the time.

While Congress is not in session, perhaps the nation would have time to recover from the wounds Congress inflicted upon it during the session.

Congressmen are sure to cry out against the halving of their salaries. Perhaps they should remember that a part-time legislature was the original idea.

Going back to live among their constituents would put Congressmen's values more in tune with the people they represent.

Those who do not have farms, businesses, or law firms could use their influence, credentials and abilities to land a job in a fast food restaurant, where the minimum wage just went up to $4.25.

Tigers lose at Kearney

Baseball team snaps losing streak against Friends

Claudette Humphrey
Sports writer

The Fort Hays State baseball team traveled to Nebraska to take on Kearney State College Wednesday afternoon.

The Tigers, who were coming off their first win of the season, were unable to continue the winning ways as the Falcons came out on top, 11-1.

FHSU captured its first win of the baseball season when they took both games of a doubleheader Saturday against Friends University.

Head Coach Tom Mahon said poor defensive play by the Tigers played a major role in the loss.

"They (Kearney) had 18 hits and three homeruns. We were just never able to put together a good defensive showing against them."

"They hit into a double-play once, and we threw the ball into right field which helped Kearney to score a few more runs. We can't win if we play like that," Mahon said.

Joel Thamer, Sylvan Grove sophomore, was the starting and losing pitcher for the Tigers.

Mahon said the Falcons were the toughest team the Tigers have faced this season.

"Kearney was probably the best hitting team we've gone up against so far this season."

Mahon said one of the biggest obstacles for the Tigers has been getting behind and then losing the intensity of play.

"We don't play well when we get behind. We seem to lose our confidence at the defensive aspect first, and that trickles into our pitching and hitting."

"Kearney (State College) was probably the best hitting team we've gone up against so far this season."

Tom Mahon,
head coach

"If we are able to get some runs on the board and get ahead, we are a very good ballclub," Mahon said.

FHSU will begin 18 games of District 10 competition when they travel to Emporia State University Saturday and then return home

Sunday afternoon to host Benedictine College.

Mahon said he believes the Tigers should be competitive in District 10 play.

"I think we should be able to do real well against Emporia State if we play tough defensively and get some good pitching."

"An Emporia State and Fort Hays matchup is always a tough game. Just the rivalry makes it a good game to watch," he said.

Mahon said the game on Sunday should be good for the players.

"It's always good to play at home, and once again I think we should fare well against them."

"Hopefully we'll be able to put together a good game against Emporia on Saturday, and that will carry over to Sunday when we are able to play at home," he said.

Mahon said he hopes the District games will be an incentive to the Tigers to play well.

"The guys know that the next few games are District games and that if they have any hopes of post-season play they are going to have to go out there and win."

"I think the competition in the District is pretty even, and we should have a good chance against any of the teams we'll be playing," Mahon said.

The Fort Hays State golf team will travel to the University of Nebraska to compete in the Nebraska Wesleyan Invitational this Friday at Lincoln, Nebraska. The tournament will begin at 8 a.m.

This tournament will be the Tigers' first action against District 10 competition.

The most recent 4th place honors at the Nebraska Wesleyan Invitational last Friday at Lincoln, Nebraska. Wesleyan took two of the top three team positions. FHSU's team scored a 316 to take 3rd and the gold team came in at 312 to win the tournament. North Dakota State University finished in 2nd place by tallying a score of 314.

Taking top honors on an individual basis for the Tiger squad was Kent Thompson, Hays senior. Thompson paced the squad with a 7-over-79 at the Holmes Golf Course, which was good enough for an 8th place showing.

Nebraska Wesleyan took individual top honors as well. Mark Dymek took 1st place with a score of 73.

The team's next competition is the Kansas Newman College Invitational scheduled for April 17, at Reflection Ridge Golf Course in Wichita.
